Earth Day draws folks to campus

Several thousand people attended Earth Day 1994 activities last Sunday from one to six p.m. on UT Tyler's campus. The mostly sunny day furthered the cheer and good will of Earth Day, letting the public attend various educational activities and exhibits, and listen to live entertainment. UTT and the League of Women Voters of Texas Education Fund co-sponsored the event.

Most of the exhibits and education booths were set up around UTT's Harvey Lake.

Game wardens and inland fishery representatives assisted children fishing in the lake. Ann Thompson of Texas Parks and Wildlife Department said, "We brought 50 rods and reels with earthworms, and at one time people were using all 50 rods."

"We brought touchy, feeling

The ballots are tallied. The results are in.

On May 1 the newly elected Student Association officers will begin their terms.

Marty Cole, Troup senior, was elected president. Cole overwhelmingly defeated Don Pittman from the school of business, receiving 256 votes to Pittman's 83.

"I am extremely pleased with the results of the election, especially with the near-record voter turn-out," Cole said. "We hope this will mean that more students will become involved with Student Association projects."

Cole follows Robert Parker as SA president. Parker did not seek re-election.

René Hopper will be the S.A.'s next vice president, having defeated Jeff Sorrells by a vote of 212 to 101. Hopper succeeds the

Festival brings flavor to UTT

By Marilie Brandstetter
Managing Editor

There was dancing, music, food and fun for all at UT Tyler's International Day festivities recently.

The event was both organized and performed by UTT students.

Highlighting the celebration was pianist Srdjan Filip Caldarovic of Croatia.

Caldarovic won several awards in piano competitions in the former Yugoslavia and in Italy. He has performed both solo recitals and concerts with chamber orchestras, including the famous "Zagreb Soloists."

Leigh Winskie, Grand Saline junior, heard Caldarovic's performance. "Dang, he's good," Winskie said. "He had a lot of musicality."

Students from India served foods from their home land at the international cultures exhibit held in UC 118. Rhoda Dike of Nigeria wore a traditional dress and described artifacts displayed near a bowl of a Nigerian snack food called Chichi.

Taiwan, Mexico and several European countries were also represented. Exhibitors showed characteristic goods to those interested in understanding the significance of the items.

While exhibits continued in room 118, the parade of recitations, musical performances and travel study journal readings continued. Gary O'Berg taught folk dances from nations like Greece and Hungary and several members of John Tyler High School's International Baccalaureate Program performed the Tango and Mexican Hat Dance.

Speaking of the day's events, UTT president Dr. George Hamm said, "It should be an egalitarian exchange of ideas and an exchange of talents, knowledge, relationships and experiences as well as goods and services."

"We're going to continue to expand international programs like Sister Cities, the Eisenhower Golf Classic and the International Studies Programs," Hamm said.

Small town gossip creates lifetime of mountains

Gary, Texas, like many small East Texas towns, is often referred to as a "hole in the road." There really isn't much to see—a convenience store, post office, school and several churches.

Sharon Cockrell

The town could just as easily be called a ghost town—not because of the lack of people or activities, although these, too, are few, but because of the ghosts that come back to haunt those who have had any ties with the town.

The ghosts are the skeletons in the closet that are never allowed to die. They are the skeletons of past generations that this generation must also pay for.

The town is interesting only in that it is full of contradictions—people either love it or hate it. The church is the biggest contradiction of all.

Church is an important part of life here. Baptist churches are everywhere. Like the town, they are small and self-important.

Many of the church members help out in times of crisis—praying for the sick or, if that fails, bringing a covered dish. They will sit with the sick, take fruit baskets to nursing homes and chauffeur the elderly.

Amazingly, many of these same people are the ones who routinely tear lives and families apart with

And sometimes it seems these people get their exercise jumping to conclusions.

They are the people who mark wedding dates on their calendars and then count the months until the couple's first child is born. They are the people who watch a teenage girl flirt with a boy and say she one knows the apple doesn't fall far from the tree.

Sadly, this gossip occurs inside church doors—sometime between 9 a.m. and the opening prayer and again before the start of the morning sermon—just in case someone was late and missed something or, more importantly, has something better to tell.

The church is truly the backbone of the town. It is also the epitome of the town—there isn't much to see in Gary, Texas, but there is always plenty to hear.

Editorial

Though UTT students' vision may be clouded by final exams, the future of student life looks much brighter than it did last year.

After the fog clears away, UTT students should stand back and appreciate what has transpired.

Coordinator of Student Activities Blair Blackburn and his revolutionary Student Association provided vastly improved activities, initiated ambitious service programs and organized one of the best student elections in the history of UTT, and fortunately, the newly initiated SA is composed of veterans.

University Pines, now established and experienced, will be more focused on UTT next year and will provide more activities and community life.

And though the retirement of Vice President for Administration Dr. Robert L. Jones is unfortunate, he made success possible.

Now it is up to students to validate all this work by making use of the new, improved services.

Grandmother's house was best classroom

Most of what has served me well in life, I learned in my grandmother's house. A small white frame, set among East Texas pines, Granny's house was void of television, a VCR and other technology we take for granted today. The front room, though, where her old mahogany upright piano stood, buzzed with excitement.

Billie

My grandmother was a classical pianist, and she taught me to love the beautiful sonatas and concertos of the masters. I would sit patiently beside her and watch, captivated by the way Granny's fingers scaled the ivories, interpreting Mozart, Chopin, Beethoven or Bach.

She also composed music, and I never tired of observing how she placed sharps and flats along five lines, creating magical melodies, previously unknown and unheard.

Granny loved to read, and from the bookcases in her house, I acquainted myself with Hemingway, Sinclair Lewis, Jane Austen, Steinbeck, Fitzgerald and many others.

One book, World Enough and Time, by Robert Penn Warren, was about her ancestors. Years later, I read it, but could never establish if this was true.

Granny loved to tell stories and history came alive when she described ancient rulers and their kingdoms. She knew all about Napoleon and Henry VIII. As she revealed details of their lives, I knew history was fascinating and wanted to know more.

The things I didn't learn in my Grandmother's house became just as important as what I did learn.

I knew Granny was Catholic—she had a picture of the Pope and President Kennedy on her walls—but she mixed her religion with a spark of irreverence.

She had a cousin, Aileen, a Pentecostal street preacher from New Orleans, who visited occasionally. Always dressed in black, she both fascinated and frightened me when she ranted, "Repent all you sinners, or God will destroy us."

Kneeling on the wooden floor in my grandmother's house, she would raise her hands over her head, and waving her Bible, pray for the redemption of granny's soul. Convinced that a conversion had occurred, Cousin Aileen would kiss us and say goodbye.

Granny would then make herself a whiskey and lemon. While sipping her toddy, she would rub her black rosary beads, and say to me with a smile, "Sis, do you think I need to call the priest for communion?" Religion was never used to punish or coerce me into any line of thinking.

Granny had a Mexican gardener and a black maid, and I loved it when they brought their children to work with them. Youthful innocence has a way of transcending cultural barriers, and, being raised in the South, I'm thankful I was taught that prejudice based on a person's skin color was unacceptable—character was the important thing.

The lessons of our past have tremendous influence on our future. But I feel we've sacrificed much of our past to reach the future. Thoughtful interaction within families competes with every electronic gadget invented. Will the information super highway really make changes that improve humanity and restore basic decency?

My grandmother's house, part of a simpler time, is gone. Where it once stood, there now stands a college dormitory. But the legacy left me—one of beauty, humor and a desire for knowledge—continues to enrich my life daily.

Outgoing editor bids farewell to readers, staff

A year ago, the Patriot staff and I set out to make a few changes in our school's paper.

We did — and for the most part, the changes were received well by you, the reader. We made attempts to put "news" in the paper,

Jay Arrington

to cut out some of the fluff and to give you more bang for the buck, as a university paper should.

I think we succeeded; if not, we came very close. But there is still a long way to go. The Patriot is growing and expanding, along with the needs of the school and the needs of the students. It is this publication's never-ending goal to serve you. True, we made our share of mistakes, and for some reason people remember those more than the positive things the paper did. But no one can say we did not do our best to serve. There were times when we were stretched to our limits, but we always did our best. You must admit, we came a long way, but there are still mountains to climb.

Beginning with this issue, the new editors take control — I'm a lame duck. I'll be honest, it will be good to let go of the reigns. The new editors will do well; I have seen them work, and I would like to thank Marilie Brandstetter and Jeremy Coe for their dedication this past year. They stuck by me and kicked me in the pants when I needed it.

There are other people who deserve to be thanked as well, like ad manager Gail McAlister — who spent many a long night up here working when she should have been studying or sleeping. Thanks also to Dr. Robert Jones, Dr. Stephen Lefevre and Blair Blackburn for their words of encouragement; to all of my staff; to Dr. Loftin for letting me do it my way; to my friends who told me the paper was great; and to my critics who said the paper lacked substance. (The actual word they used was "sucked," but that might be offensive to some readers.) And a special thanks to all of you who wrote letters to the editor. I am glad to know that someone does actually read this stuff close enough to get miffed or inspired by it.

Overall, it was a successful year here at the Patriot, we got a lot done even with hurdles to jump (staff changes, blown deadlines, ice storms, etc.), and if I in particular stepped on anyone's toes — then I did my job. No hard feelings, it just comes with the territory.

So in closing, give support to the new editors. They'll need it. And if you think you are going to miss me, I'll still be around. But I'm looking forward to getting sleep for a change!

Have a great summer and a super 1994-95. Jeremy and Marilie will take care of you!

... ROSEBUD!!!

Bergfeld Park won't forget heinous crime City of Tyler chose to ignore

Remember when you were in grade school and the whole class got detention because a couple of loudmouths couldn't sit still and be quiet? How did you feel?

I remember feeling so angry and yet so helpless because the ones who caused the problem never seemed to care.

Marty Cole

It was as if they revelled in the fact that their ignorance and disrespect hurt the rest of us.

The sad part is that no matter how old we get those same ignorant loudmouths keep showing up.

Take for example the ignorant, prejudiced, hate-filled, racist, homophobic (am I being redundant?) hoodlums whose brutal hate crime last year sentenced Tyler to detention forever.

Detention, because we can no longer enjoy the elegant beauty of Bergfeld Park in the evening.

Detention, because the sounds of children on swings have been replaced by the icy echoes of silence and fear.

Detention, because this heinous murder is now forever embedded in the history of Bergfeld and the City of Tyler.

Most of us will eventually try to forget about what happened to Nicholas Ray West; but the park will not.

The trees and the grass will always hold the memory of when a visitor to their serene home was kidnapped, stripped, beaten and murdered.

If the park could talk, what would it tell us?

Would it scream at us for allowing its safe, inviting nature to be stripped and ruined by hatred?

Would it hold us responsible for the loss of its serenity and beauty? It would be right. We have only ourselves to blame for the fate of Bergfeld Park.

Who among us can say that we didn't see it coming?

The rumors of gang violence and illicit sexual behavior at night in Bergfeld had long been an accepted fact of life for most of us.

But we didn't do anything to stop it. Instead, we turned our back, hoped it wasn't true, and a man died because of it.

Well, now we know the truth and the choice is ours to change things.

Perhaps, if we are willing to make the effort to reclaim what we allowed to be taken, the park will open its arms and welcome us back. But we must be willing to fight through our doubts and fears about the past and work together.

So when the next set of loudmouths comes along, we should be handling out the detention slips ourselves.

Marty Cole, Troup senior, is the Entertainment Editor for the Patriot.

Letters

To the editor:

Billie Dukes' article on the importance of education ("No, You Can't Quit," April 14) was right on target. The 16-year-old teenager who dropped out of school to sell spray bottles of cleaning liquid from door to door and who thought he was "gonna be rich and retire soon" is not an isolated case. The main culprits for this alarming trend of neglecting education in pursuit of instant riches are television, movies and sports. We parade instant millionaires across the television screen every week as winners of state-sponsored lottery; we glorify the sport stars earning millions of dollars a year without any education and thorough advertising we glamorize luxury items and money. Education and acquiring knowledge are no longer the No. 1 goals for our youth according to a recent survey, in which 95 percent of those surveyed said their first priority is to be a millionaire.

Is this the way we prepare our children for a highly technological world of the future? Someone should tell these kids that while the goal of making money is not bad, they should also strive for higher goals that are more permanent than the transitory accumulation of material things. Two obvious places to start are our classrooms and homes.

If a high school teacher makes reading and research part of an assignment, he may get reactions like: "I don't feel like it," or "make me," or "I don't care about that; just give me a zero." Well, in that case the teachers should have enough power to discipline that student, or send him to the principal, or inform the parents. It is time that teachers, parents and church leaders take charge in this society and tell our children the truth like it is and, the truth is, we are living on the edge and we may fall any time.

The Gem and Mineral Society's educational exhibit had children digging around in a sand-filled plastic swimming pool. Society member Judy Warren said, "This is Pippi Longstocking's backyard, and the children had to pick up her trash and sort into different piles: aluminum, paper, plastic, cloth, and iron that we tested with a magnet."

UTT students to study medicine

By Andrea Armstrong
Staff Writer

Nine out of 10 UT Tyler medical students who applied have been accepted to medical school.

Most of the 27 applicants have used the University Health Professions Advisory Committee.

This year three students have been accepted to different medical schools.

The students are Ariana Vierkant (B.S. Biology, '94) at Texas A&M University, College Station; Jeremy Gibson (B.S. Chemistry, '94) at The Medical Branch, Galveston; and Terry Peery (B.S. Chemistry, '93) at Texas Tech Medical School at Lubbock.

Peery, of Tyler, graduated from Bullard High School. He had a grade point average of 3.6 at UTT. After graduating from medical school he plans to work in pediatric oncology (study of cancer in children).

Gibson, a graduate of Robert E. Lee High School, also maintained a grade point average of 3.6 at UTT. Gibson said medical school has been a life-long ambition, motivated by an accident that happened to his brother.

Vierkant graduated from Jacksonville High School and has maintained a grade point average of 3.98. She plans to go into general surgery.

There is no better way to end a season than as an undefeated champion. The UT Tyler tennis team will have that opportunity at this year's national tournament. During May 23-28, the top sixteen teams in NAIA tennis will come together in Tulsa, Oklahoma, to battle it out for the championship. The Patriots have spent the entire season ranked No. 1 in the NAIA tennis polls.

"We have been hoping for this all season" says Bronx, N.Y. junior Brian Notis, "We have worked hard, and want to come back with a title."

The team made their intentions known early with a spectacular showing in the UT Tyler Invitational Tennis Tournament. The Patriots knocked off UT Arlington, Oklahoma City University and Schreiner College of Kerryville.

"I'd like to have more days like today" responded coach Fred Kniffen when asked about his team's performance.

Early in March, the team was fortunate enough to take a trip to Pensacola, Florida. There, the Patriots found the time to defeat Belhaven College, Mobile College, University West Florida, and BYU Hawaii. Three of those teams were ranked in the top 10. Since then, the Patriots have scored home victories over North Eastern Oklahoma State and Oklahoma Christian University.

They ended regular season play victorious in the Oklahoma City Tournament on April 16, leaving them plenty of time to prepare for the championship tournament.

"Right now we are working mainly on conditioning," Notis said. "After finals, we will be scrimmaging TJC, and I'm sure coach will work us hard."
